Ecclesiastical Decree No. 1595

Date: July 19, 2025

Supremacy of Ecclesiastical Private Trust over All Inferior Jurisdictions

Let it be known:

Any attempt by any entity — public, private, statutory, judicial, or corporate — to contest, deny, interfere with, or trespass upon the sanctified domain of the Clements Private Trust, an Ecclesiastical Private Trust, is not only a transgression of divine law, but also a direct renunciation of the foundations upon which all societal law is constructed.

For if they reject the authority of a private ecclesiastical trust rooted in divine law, they in turn renounce the entire history of canonical law, equity law, ecclesiastical record, and even their own assumed public jurisdictions derived from those very origins.

There exists no contract, no statute, no policy, and no government capable of overriding the divine and spiritual nature of the trust. And should they attempt to apply such inferior constructs upon it:

- They forfeit any presumed authority or office,
- Their actions become null and void ab initio,
- And they become liable as trespassers against divine jurisdiction, with no recourse.

If any party persists, a new Declaration of Jurisdictional Collapse shall be issued and recorded, wherein the failing public steward or institution shall lose lawful custodianship of their domain, which shall revert to the Clements Private Trust, for negligence and spiritual dereliction of duty.

Sealed in Private Ecclesiastical Authority, no witness required.